

14:35

VICTIM PROFILE

You want to know everything about the victim. This profile was compiled ASAP and describes Ken's personal details up to the end.

Carson held many careers in his day, but always maintained his Carson's Nifty Neckties fashion line.

Every week Carson and his longtime girlfriend, Barbie, would visit Some People Eat Well, their favorite fusion restaurant.

Carson was an avid reader of the magazine Ladies Boutique Journal, and even became a contributing journalist for some time.

Carson graduated from college with honors and a degree in Fashion And Quality.

The Last Airbender was Carson's favorite childhood television program.

A suburbanite, Carson grew up near the North Pao River and loved boating with his friends.

Carson's baseball team could not decide on a mascot and instead became the Sasquatch Alligator Tigers to include the preferences of all teammates.

Carson worked for the political campaign of "Freedom With Information Worldwide" before attending law school in his home town.

Acquaintances of Carson all maintained he had no enemies, but many noted his "Really I'm Plastic" personality.

Carson's Essentially Organic co. was started by Barbie and Ken to protect the rainforest and provide the world with organic sustainably-grown coffee.

Carson resented that a musician born in 1914 shares his name, but nevertheless was a big fan of that musician's hit song "Ain't Any Real Princes."

Carson held many different careers, but got most recently started working for Canadian Public Radio where he was adored by his coworkers.

The University of Southern Arizona used Carson's picture on all of their brochures and websites, even though he never attended.

Carson's favorite book, Dear Nora Summers, was perpetually open by his bedside.

Carson's faithful spaniel Nico is actually named Nicolas Flamel Lawrence (the third).